an ounce ; 5' ss i an ounce and a half.
HI A minim ; a drop,

$ (L. recipe), take.

The above symbols are employed almost always in medical prescriptions. A prescription consists of the following parts: (i) The Superscription; (2) The Inscription ; (3) The Subscription ; (4) The Signature. The Superscription, which consists of the letter $, is a relic of the days of astrology. It originally was used to represent the symbol of the planet Jupiter. By common consent it is now regarded as representing the imperative mood of the Latin verb recipere, to take. The Inscription is a statement of the names of the substances to be used, with their quantities. The Subscription is made up of the directions for the guidance of the dispenser. The Signature includes the directions to the patient. This part of the prescription should be written in English ; the other parts are in Latin. Sometimes the signature also is in Latin.

The body or prescription contains the following : the Basis, or principal active ingredient ; the Adjuvattt, or Auxiliary, to assist its action ; th^ Corrective, to correct or diminish some undesirable quality ;
the Velticlc, or Excipient, to give a suitable form for administration.

ceremonious than our ancestors a few generations ago, when letters to the nearest relatives and most intimate friends were begun and ended in the most formal manner. Designations like ' Mrs General ,' ' Mis

Captain ,' ' Mrs Dr ,' which were fifty years ago not uncommon, were always improper. Persons holding offices other than those enumerated are addressed in the usual form, ' Sir,'' ' Dear Sir,' or ' My dear Sir,' according to the more or less formal terms on which the writer may be with his correspondent. A firm is addressed ' Gentlemen ' or ' Dear Sirs. '
